A bit about me

I've been working in IT for quite some time. I've covered different roles from coder, team manager, customer care, even exploring new technologies. All my professional work life is in the financial banking sector, so I don't do business with Joomla. I'm a volunteer, since Mambo time, I've served as a forum moderator, as a mentor for the GSoC program, as a coder and currently I'm in the Bug Squad Team.

The Vice President's role

From the Open Source Matters Board Member Roles:

> "..is to support the work of the President.."

While I may agree in principle, it can become very difficult if you don't know who the president is, or will be and consequently what his ideas are. I'll feel free to support case by case.

> "... holds no budget ..."

This is a reciprocal guarantee, changes may happen even with the help of volunteers and the power of the ideas .

This is how I will do it. I will follow The 10th Man Rule or devil's advocate.

My rule

The 10th Man rule is one where there is at least one person to serve as the loyal dissenter. If there are 10 people in a room and nine agree, the role of the tenth is to disagree and point out flaws in whatever decision the group has reached. A loyal opposition is not a contradiction in terms, but rather the promise of clear decision making, accountability and transparency

The proposal

- Switch the focus on Joomla 4
- Listen people from outside "glip"
- Transparency
